UC Placemaking is excited to welcome Eric Bunge of Brooklyn based nARCHITECTS to UC Davis as part of the Placemaking speaker series. Is architecture inherently complete? Or is it a state of incompleteness and seeming inadequacy that incites us to imagine architecture as an armature for an ever-changing daily life? Across a range of buildings, public spaces, and ephemeral installations, nARCHITECTS argues for the formal and social potential of an architecture that remains somehow incomplete and ambiguously perceived—or in the architects' words, Almost Buildings.

UC Placemaking is a multicampus initiative that seeks to enrich the connection between people and place through the arts and design. This free talk is open to all and will be followed by refreshments. Generous support has been provided by Imagining America, the UC Davis Department of Design, and The University of California.
